3/20 It has been so long since I've heard from you, Jay, that I should have been further word from L and I was awaiting word from you on whether you would have time to read the epilogue, that I wonder whether you are well or if something else is bothering you. If the latter, ask...The decision adverse to Garrison and Spector's attempt to eliminate a bit of liberalism in the rights of the accused make an interesting bracketing at the Supreme Court. I think both are wrong. But I also think the Garrison precedent witha not be particularly welcome by Spector's peers. I can't see how a prosecutor can be sued for bringing a prosecution without every other prosecutor being liable to prosecution after acquittal...And now strange no outcry about the Chicago Panther case from the same liberals?...Little new. I've heard nothing of consequence from anyone since writing...Don't bother copying the Times' story on the loss of the Chicago report to it. I have it. And unless there is something particularly grevous in the story of your prosecutor's appeal against Miranda, not that either, thanks....Burglary while waiting for Lil and then too tired for other things, I read Landa. I am very glad Jerry got it for me. I'm not certain which parts of what are true, which interpretations, which distorted by his special rightwist, colon beliefs, but it remains a book that has values in many ways...Lil has another month of employment. Although we need the income, relatively slight as it is, we both look forward to its end because it is too much for her. She is still working most nights, including this one... I presume you are busy in school. I hope you are not ill. Best, HW
